West of the limestone is an area of sedimentary rocks varying from graphitic slate to finegrained false-bedded quartzite. In places, particularly north of Potato Mountain, the rock has been jointed into pencil-shaped rhombohedral fragments. Its age is unknown, and so far it has not been definitely correlated with the patches of slate to the east. This slate extends from the Kanauguk to a point about 5 miles east of Tin City, where it is succeeded by a limestone of Carboniferous age, apparently overlying the slate. IGNEOUS ROCKS. Cape Mountain is a mass of coarse gray porphyritic granite thrust through the limestone, and into the latter acidic dikes and sills have been intruded in all directions. There are also later basic dikes cutting both limestone and granite. The upper 400 to 4. 50 feet of the mountain are composed...
