Two university students from Colorado pack their bicycles and camping equipment off to England for a 6-week tour at the invitation of a London cycling friend. The two cyclists admire the opposite sex as much as the scenic British countryside, until they find themselves in the crossfire between rival drug gangs in the Midlands. The opposite sex proves much more complicated when they form a rivalry of their own with a Scottish cyclist near Edinburgh. Their plans change after they meet a mysterious Swiss hitchhiker at a youth hostel in Somerset. A lark takes them onto the Continent. Irony awaits them back in London, if they can return in time for their flight home. The protagonists get slapped upside the head by windy dales, the Queens English, riding on the left, steep moors, haggis, spotted dick, fellow travelers, cricket, football and growing up from a European perspective.
