They haveattended my international dialogues in the past year. made effortsto coHect and record them and compiled the contents into thiSbook. Readers will find that the rapid growth of the Internet andsatellite television have made the world ever smaller; the public ofdifferent countries also pay more and more attention to how theirown countries'international reputation influences their personalinterests. In this sense. the public of different countries are nolonger passive receivers of public diplomacy.but activeparticipants. Today.the main body of public diplomacy is the socialinstitutes and NGOs in economy.culture. education. science. media. sports. arts and religion.
